The song “295” became one of Sidhu Moosewala’s most iconic and controversial tracks. It boldly critiques societal injustice and the consequences of speaking truth in the face of systemic resistance. Through this song, Sidhu gave a voice to the unheard and sparked important conversations about censorship and expression. Its influence extended beyond music — becoming a cultural moment.

Tribute in Moosa :

Artists Return to His Roots

Artists from across Punjab and beyond have traveled to Sidhu Moosewala's hometown of Moosa to pay tribute in the most heart-felt way — through music. What once was a quiet village is now the epicenter of a global tribute as fans and performers gather to honor his legacy.

In an open-air stage near the fields where Sidhu once walked, performers like AP Dhillon, Karan Aujla, Diljit Dosanjh, Ajan Dhillon are uniting for one cause: to give back to the artist who gave them a voice.

LEGACY LIVES ON

Sidhu Moosewala left behind more than just music — he left a message. His lyrics became anthems of resistance, his voice a symbol of strength. From village streets to global stages, his words sparked change and gave power

He was a good man — just misunderstood.
